1. Parenting Coordination: Managing Challenging Scenarios
   (legal and mental health)
Parenting coordination has become an increasingly popular dispute resolution process for working with high conflict post-decree parents. This institute will present case vignettes that reflect some of the most challenging situations that parent coordinators face including: (1) the difficulty in establishing and managing boundaries with difficult clients; (2) structuring functional coparenting communication; and (3) addressing the myriad child-related issues that have a constant flow in PC work. Participants will work with case material that highlights the legal and professional practice landmines that pervade this legal-psychological hybrid role.

Robin M. Deutsch, PhD, Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology, Newton, MA
Matthew J. Sullivan, PhD, Palo Alto, CA

2. Cross-Examining the Expert in Custody Litigation  (legal)
This institute will help attorneys develop an effective approach to cross-examination of expert witnesses in custody litigation. It will focus on the fundamentals of cross-examination, as well as the structure of expert opinion testimony and the opportunities within that structure that can be exploited on cross. The presenter will also provide numerous examples from actual cross-examinations on such issues as bias, deficient methodology, ethical breaches, diagnostic conclusions, and opinions predicated on psychological testing.

Timothy M. Tippins, Esq., Co-author Empirical and Ethical Problems with Custody Recommendations, Albany, NY

12:00pm–1:00pm   Lunch (on your own)
1:00pm–3:00pm Opening Plenary

Professor Nancy Ver Steegh, JD, MSW, AFCC President

Daubert and the Mosaic of Child Custody Assessment

Changes in rules governing the admissibility of scientific evidence emphasize the scientific reliability of the methodology used. This session will explore the application of Daubert and its progeny to the methods and procedures used in child custody evaluations. A Daubert analysis includes a number of elements such as whether the evaluator: (1) employed the forensic model; (2) employed reliable methods and procedures within each step of the evaluation; and (3) analyzed the data generated by the evaluation against the current, peer-reviewed literature and the needs of the specific family under examination. This session will inform participants about case law concerning the application of Daubert and its progeny. Panelists will discuss whether conceptualizing the evaluation process as either a scientific or clinical judgment endeavor is helpful. The session will also address the extent to which a child custody evaluation is better understood when its scientific components are examined in light of their literature-based empirical findings and when clinical judgment components are examined in light of their literature-based conceptual foundations. The impact of requiring more scientifically-informed custody evaluations for the administration of justice, the parents and their children will be examined.

Jonathan W. Gould, PhD, ABPP, Co-author, The Art and Science of Child Custody Evaluations, Charlotte, NC

Gary L. Nickelson, Esq., Fort Worth, TX

Mary Vidas, Esq., Philadelphia, PA

Moderator: Gaetano “Guy” Ferro, Esq., Darien, CT

3:00pm–3:15pm Break

3:15pm–5:15pm Concurrent Sessions 1-5

1. Deconstructing the Custody Evaluator’s Report (legal)

Child custody evaluations are a comprehensive window into the family when parents are contesting custody and access arrangements. Many evaluations follow AFCM Model Standards of Practice or the APA Guidelines on Child Custody Evaluations, are well-written, and show evidence of scientific approach. Others do not. This workshop will focus on the litigated case; identifying important elements of a comprehensive child custody evaluation, including the methodology and the well-written and thoughtful analysis, and help the reader understand if the recommendations are consistent with the data.

Pamela Sloan, Esq., New York, NY

Philip M. Stabl, PhD, ABPP, Co-author, Forensic Psychology Consultation in Child Custody Litigation, Queen Creek, AZ
2. Promoting Children’s Resilience Despite Divorce (mental health)

This session is designed to help mental health professionals focus on factors that promote resilience in children throughout the divorce process, despite many inherent risks. The most effective “therapists” for children are their parents, who must learn to manage their emotions so they can be authoritative parents, work to develop an effective co-parenting relationship (or at least contain conflict around children), and take a child-focused approach to the many tasks of divorce such as talking to children about separating or preparing them for parents’ new dating relationships. This session will review the research literature and identify empirically based strategies that mental health professionals can use to help parents foster resilience in children of separation and divorce.

Robert E. Emery, PhD, Author, The Truth About Children and Divorce, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, VA

3. Best Interests Parenting Plans: Clinical, Legal and Practical Dimensions (legal and mental health)

Best interests parenting plans must address complex sets of child- and family-focused objectives while also meeting legal and statutory requirements. This session will review the emerging literature on the clinical, legal and practical dimensions of parenting plans. Presenters will demonstrate how to develop comprehensive plans that meet the needs of children and families, including how to individualize approaches for children with special needs and how to address safety concerns when circumstances or situations demand it.

Milfred “Bud” Dale, PhD, JD, Topeka, KS

Mary Kay Kisthardt, JD, LLM, University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law, Kansas City, MO

This workshop will assist attorneys in understanding the nature of psychological testing and assessment instruments, and their use and misuse in the child custody evaluation process. It will focus on evidentiary challenges that the attorney may wish to raise, highlight various “red flags” that are often encountered in forensic reports, and offer specific approaches to analyzing evaluation reports, in conjunction with the evaluator’s underlying data, to further the goal of constructing effective themes for cross-examination.

Timothy M. Tippins, Esq., Co-author, Empirical and Ethical Problems with Custody Recommendations, Albany, NY
5. Assessments of Risk (mental health)

The use of structured professional judgment (SPJ) protocols is important when assessing risk. The primary goals of such an approach to risk assessment are to prevent violence by identifying risk factors, to include those that may change over time, and factor in management strategies that assist in decision making. These guidelines assist the mental health professional in making decisions using risk factors in a more cohesive and comprehensive manner. This session will review these factors, using several types of assessment tools.

Transparency and the Rights of Clients

Due process is considered a fundamental and essential component of our legal system; however, there is tremendous variation across jurisdictions in the degree to which lawyers and clients can access the files of mental health professionals who conduct custody evaluations and testify regarding their findings. This session will explore the tension that exists between the rights of the clients to obtain the evidence contained in these files and the desire of the courts to “protect” those children and parents whom they perceive as vulnerable and possible victims of inappropriate use of the evidence. This interactive session will provide all audience members with an opportunity to participate through a facilitated case analysis. _A brief break is scheduled midway through the plenary session._

2:00pm–4:00pm  Concurrent Sessions 6-10

6. Ethics at the Intersection of Psychology and the Law

Ethical dilemmas for mental health professionals frequently arise when the distinct cultures of psychology and the law intersect. What are the ethical standards, risk management considerations and practical approaches to employ at the intersection? This session will present a series of vignettes to facilitate audience discussion reflecting ethical predicaments psychologists may encounter when providing testimony, case consultation, or evaluation in child custody matters. Participants will strengthen their conceptualization of ethical dilemmas through an ethical decision-making approach that considers relevant American Psychological Association ethical standards, as well as legal, clinical, and risk management issues.

Robin M. Deutsch, PhD, Co-author, Seven Things Your Teenager Won’t Tell You, Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology, Newton, MA

Lindsay Childress-Beatty, JD, PhD, Director of Adjudication/Deputy Director, APA Ethics Office, Washington, DC

7. Court-Involved Therapists in Child Custody Disputes: Attorney’s Dream, Therapist’s Nightmare

Therapists involved with family members during the family court process are presented with considerable challenges. The legal-adversarial context is a treacherous minefield, particularly for non-forensic clinicians. It requires enhanced professional practice procedures concerning patient informed consent, privacy, an impeccable treatment methodology, and the ability to recognize and work with conscious and unconscious client agendas. This workshop will explore levels of court-involvement, issues of privilege and confidentiality, and their implications for mental health treatment. An attorney-psychologist team will present guidelines to avoid pitfalls that can create professional risk and do harm to clients.

Matthew J. Sullivan, PhD, Palo Alto, CA

Louise T. Truax, Esq., Fairfield, CT
8. Parenting Plan Evaluations and Intimate Partner Violence
[legal and mental health]
Among custody-litigating families there is a surprisingly high incidence of intimate partner violence. This session will explore best practices for understanding the impact of intimate partner violence on individual children and assessing the implications for parenting. Challenges associated with the conduct and subsequent use of child custody evaluations in the context of intimate partner violence will be analyzed in light of recent social science research on the topic.

Nancy Ver Steegh, JD, MSW, William Mitchell College of Law, St. Paul, MN
Leslie M. Drozd, PhD, Co-editor, Parenting Plan Evaluations, Newport Beach, CA

9. Developing Parenting Plans that Benefit Children:
Current Research and Practice Implications
[legal and mental health]
This session provides a research-based context for developing effective parenting plans that meet child and adolescent needs following separation and divorce in both typical and at-risk families. Relevant research on the major risk factors of parent mental health, quality of parenting, and conflict and related protective factors associated with children’s post-separation adjustment will be presented. Controversies regarding age-appropriate parenting plans and overnights for infants and toddlers will be addressed, including the sources of disagreement embedded in attachment and overnight research.

Joan B. Kelly, PhD, Co-author, Surviving the Breakup, Corte Madera, CA

10. Preparing Clients for Custody Evaluations
[legal]
Parents who become involved in the child custody evaluation process are often prepared by their attorneys. Some attorneys prepare their clients themselves, while other attorneys may retain a mental health professional to assist in the preparation of parent/clients. This workshop will explore the nature and structure of parent preparation for child custody evaluation. Areas of professional agreement and disagreement about the manner in which parents are prepared by attorneys and their consultants will be discussed.
