Stepmothers Learn to Navigate New Waters

Courtesy of J.M. Craig Press, Inc.

Whiting, J. B., Smith, D.R., Barnett, T. and Graftsky, E. L. [2007]. Overcoming the Cinderella Myth: A Mixed Methods Study of Successful Stepmothers. Journal Divorce and Remarriage, 47, 95-109.

Custody evaluators generally ask step parents to be included in their evaluations since they can have a significant impact on children's well being. This is the first study we have seen that examines the characteristics of successful stepmothers.

The purpose of the study was to interview self-described successful stepmothers in order to have them describe the parenting challenges they faced. Nine participants were married, for at least five years, to men who had children from a previous relationship. All described themselves as successful stepmothers.

The authors found that:

- When first married, the stepmothers "professed a sense of confusion and lack of direction about... boundaries with their step children" [p. 100]. More specifically, they reported feeling uncertain as to their role with regard to the children's biological mother. At the same time, they reported desires to be both nurturing and protecting of their stepchildren.
- Stepmothers initially expected greater support from their husbands, but instead found that their role evolved into one of more of a decision maker and activities coordinator than they might have anticipated. The latter activity involved helping to arrange visitation between the biological parents.
- Successful stepmothers were accepting of the children and their circumstances. They also saw themselves as more open and honest, more forgiving of the stepchildren, and better able to identify family problems and help resolve them than one might expect of the average stepmother.
- Nearly all the stepmothers emphasized the importance of one-on-one time with each of the children in order to establish their relationships.

The authors concluded that, "It seemed that finding a positive relationship with the biological mother was an important aspect of feeling successful for many of these stepmothers... Almost all of these stepmothers reported that they sought to act in the best interest of their stepchildren, while trying to respect the biological mother's role" [p. 104].

Critical Analysis

This study is an example of what is termed qualitative research. Unlike most of the studies we review, this is a procedure that relies heavily upon detailed interviews for the purpose of deriving common themes to be evaluated by subsequent empirical research. Such methods can be valuable in this regard but also have significant limitations. In this study for example, all the mothers were self-described as successful, but there is no independent way to validate these descriptions. A second concern is that the participants represented a convenience sample. In this case, this means that volunteers responded to fliers and inquiries in a college class. Finally, the number of participants was very small. Generally, qualitative research studies have more participants.

Recommendations

We noted above our belief that it is important to interview step parents as part of the CCE process because they may be able to provide a unique perspective on family relations that biological parents often cannot. Furthermore, successful stepparents may have found solutions to problems that the biological parents were unable to solve on their own, thereby improving children's wellbeing.

The Call of the Lattelo

by John Kydd, AFCC Past President (1996), Seattle, Washington

What is a Lattelo?

This enchanting (and sometimes breathtaking) creature was first sighted at AFCC's 42nd Annual Conference (2005) in Seattle, Washington. Pictures were taken, stories were whispered in the corners of the hospitality suite and hope soared for another sighting.

Our advance team is quite pleased to report a sighting has occurred in Stanley Park, adjacent to the Westin Bayshore Resort, home to AFCC's 45th Annual Conference, May 28-31, 2008 in Vancouver, BC. We will gather at 7:00am Thursday and Friday mornings at the hotel lobby in our favorite loping gear.

Alumni wish it to be known that this is not, by any measure, a "fun run." Firstly they point out that, for many, a "fun run" is an oxymoron like, for example, the term "presidential clarity." Next, they note, a run implies an endeavor where the slower oft feel a need to keep up with the swifter. Such is not the case with a "lope." A "lope" is more a ramble and less a dash wherein some quick lattelopers may scout ahead only to circle back to report the wonders that await around the next bend.

Each alum reported a different experience of "loping." Some speak of it as, "eloping with your inner child" or "loping is fusing with your musing," while others assert that any definition "can only diminish the experience." Many asserted that the interdisciplinary nature of the group was key to a successful sighting (apparently the most direct path is that which, at different points, can only be felt or mediated or collaborated or adjudicated). Sometimes only research can discern the proper turn to take.

Regardless of discipline, alumni reported a collective sense of elation by the end of the lattelo. Their day was very different. Some reported a pervasive feeling of gentle bliss; that it "met the best interests of my inner child," while others reported a deep (and ineffable) sense of being "heeled." Either way the alums say that this quest honors the meek, elevates the merry; and blesses even, those who tarry.

Those who wish to partake in the lattelo planning, please email John Kydd at john@kyddlwa.com. Otherwise the "questers" will meet at 7:00am in Lobby of the Bayshore.

News from Across the Pond

by Karen Mackay, Chief Executive, Resolution, Kent, England

This year marks Resolution's 25th anniversary and we are busy organizing a host of events to mark the anniversary. Resolution's National Conference is now a fixture in the calendar of family lawyers in England and Wales, but increasingly family law crosses jurisdictional borders. Families in the 21st century have kinship, cultural and financial links that span the globe. When cross-border problems arise, lawyers must know how to resolve the conflicts created by jurisdictional and ethical differences before they can begin to help their clients.

To meet the demands of the globalization of family law, Resolution is holding its first International Family Law Conference from July 1-3, 2009 in London. Topics will include:

- Children (abduction, relocation, contact, child support)
- Finances (international tax issues, reciprocal recognition and enforcement, funding litigation)
- Human rights (forced marriage, representation of children, domestic abuse, legal aid)
- Jurisdiction and forum disputes
- International liaison between lawyers and courts
- Practice issues (training and specialist accreditation, regulation and standards, independence of judiciary and legal profession, ethics)

Those interested in attending or contributing to the conference are invited to complete an expression of interest form, which can be found on the Resolution Web site or via this link:

International Conference 2009 - The Globalisation of Family Law: Sharing International Experience

This international conference will be an opportunity for family lawyers from around the world to share experience of how family justice works in other jurisdictions. The knowledge gained will be invaluable in practice. Relationships forged with foreign delegates will foster international awareness and business development opportunities. We hope that friends old and new will join us.

Resolution's National Conference

At Resolution's Annual Conference, April 5, 2008, hosting more than 400 family lawyers from England and Wales, senior family court judge, Justice Paul Coleridge used his keynote speech to lambast government neglect of the growing problem of family breakdown. Justice Coleridge compared the threat to society of the breakdown of the family as equal to the threat of global warming and compared government zeal to abolish plastic bags with their indifference to the impact of family breakdown. He particularly emphasized the lack of resources for the family court and lamented the lack of a radical vision from government about what could be done to mend the wounds of family breakdown.

His words struck a chord with Resolution members, struggling as they do on a daily basis with outmoded family laws that have not kept up with the changes to family life in the past two decades and with an under-resourced family justice system in which delays are endemic. To our transatlantic cousins, the generosity of our legal aid scheme must seem like sugar candy mountain, but our legal system has become increasingly dependent on legal aid and the current dismantling of that aspect of the family justice system has led to a large increase in applicants to the court representing themselves, even in cases involving violence, where an injunction is sought. This adds to the clogging up of the courts, leading to more delays which affect all, be they rich or poor.

Justice Coleridge's speech can be read in full on Resolution's revamped and updated Web site by clicking the "Media Center" link at www.resolution.org.uk.

New Resolution Web Site

Resolution's Web site is now an excellent source of information for family law professionals and the public. The revamped Web site aims to give basic information about family law to members of the public, to help them find a Resolution member in their area and to promote Resolution's mission: to reduce conflict in family disputes, to improve standards of practice amongst family lawyers and to improve family laws and the operation of the family justice system.

If you would like further information on these topics or other issues in England and Wales, please contact Resolution Chief Executive Karen Mackay at Karen.mackay@resolution.org.uk or visit www.resolution.org.uk.

Drops from Down Under

by Hon. Graham Mullane, New South Wales, Australia

This issue of Drops from Down Under features new research on shared parenting from the Institute of Family Studies. Additional topics include the Hague Convention, terrorism and children's legal aid, a new online mediation service and upcoming conferences in Australia and around the world.

Shared Parenting

In the courts, many family consultants, federal magistrates and judges are discovering parents in litigation have already put in place equal shared care or other shared care arrangements. Sometimes it is an informal arrangement and other times it is a written parenting plan or a consent order made in a state magistrate's court or in the Federal Magistrates Court or the Family Court of Australia.

The effect of many of these arrangements has been to subject infants or very young children to a pattern of separation from their primary care giver that may be seriously damaging to the child. Many of the parents' relationships are poor and they have no capacity to co-parent. For many children, the arrangement involves a high level of inconsistency and instability, and repeated exposure to parental conflict.

But, recent research of the Institute of Family Studies shows that shared care arrangements where children spend at least five days per fortnight (fourteen days) with each parent, are now more common (5% in 2005 and 9% now). However, this arrangement is most likely to fail. The arrangement most likely to endure is where children live primarily with one parent and spend less than four days per fortnight with the other. Some researchers are reporting that the aim of shared care is overriding considerations of children being protected from violence or exposure to violence to others.

A research paper by Hon. Professor Richard Chisholm and Dr. Jenn McIntosh about research into the effects of shared parenting orders since the changes reveals a very high incidence of conflict, and inability to co-parent amongst parents who have shared care orders, with serious adverse consequences for the children including the incidence of anxiety requiring therapeutic attention. The authors will be presenting at the AFCC 45th Annual Conference, May 28-31, 2008 in Vancouver, British Columbia

Hague Convention

In March, the High Court of Australia reversed a decision for a 12-year-old boy to be returned to New Zealand under the Hague Convention. The High Court's majority decision (3:2) overturned a majority decision (2:1) of the Full Court of the Family Court of Australia upholding the decision of the trial judge. The parties never married. The High Court held that the Central Authority had not proved that the father had ever lived with the mother and consequently had not established that under New Zealand Law the father was a guardian and had "rights of custody."

Terrorism and Children's Legal Aid

There have been ructions in February/March after the Managing Director of Victorian Legal Aid claimed that the (federal) funding available for independent legal representation for children in Victoria would be dramatically reduced because of the substantial cost of defense of 12 people charged with terrorism offences. The expenditure of federal funding on the terrorism defense had reached $6 million and was likely to total $9 million. Subsequently there has been some reassurance that there will not be cuts to legal aid for children.

New Online Mediation Web Site

Resolution Online (www.resolutiononline.com.au/) is an online family resolution service operating since May 2007. The service was established by Katherine Graham, who manages the Resolution Centre, a business focusing on workplace and commercial resolution with offices in each capital city.

The new service involves message input from the parties involving a third party mediator with a background in law, psychology or social work. The mediator helps "moderate" the discussions and assists the parties to discuss all facets of their separation. It is a user pays system and ideal for parties who are in different states or countries. It targets medium-to-high income earners.

Ritalin Debate

Last year in sentencing a 20-year-old man, who had been using prescribed Ritalin since six years of age, a New South Wales District Court Judge heard evidence from a psychiatrist that the man had become addicted to methamphetamine because of his Ritalin use. The judge said he had serious concerns because of the "amazing tide" of cases coming before him involving people prescribed Ritalin as children who went on to commit violent crime.

An ADHD support group lodged a complaint to the NSW Judicial Commission about the Judge's comments and the Commission did not dismiss the complaint, but referred it to the Chief Judge of the District Court. I am not aware of what action the Chief Judge has taken, if any.

Top Ten Tips for Interviewing Children for Custody Evaluations

1. Differences

Understand the differences between clinical/therapeutic and forensic interviews. Clinicians without specific forensic training should not engage in forensic interviews. If an issue arises during the interview that requires training more specialized than basic forensic interviewing, report it to the proper agency or refer it to an expert in an appropriate area.

2. Sound Forensic Interviews

Establish rapport, explain the interview purpose and discuss interview "ground rules." Explain the limits of confidentiality and how the information obtained will be used in a way the child will understand. The interviewer should explain to the child that it is acceptable to tell the interviewer they don't know the answer to a question or don't understand it. Furthermore, they should correct the interviewer if s/he is mistaken. The interviewer should provide children with practice responding to open ended prompts when describing their experiences.

3. Understand Child Development

In conducting forensic assessments of children, it is critical that the interviewer determines any factors that may impinge upon the child's ability to comprehend, recall accurately and report past events. To understand this, the interviewer should be trained in child development including memory, suggestibility, language and communication.

4. Truth or Lie

The interviewer should let the child know that they will not be able to help her/him answer questions and that it is important to tell the truth. Ask questions early in the interview that will determine if the child knows the difference between the truth and a lie.

5. Open-Ended Questions

Research has shown that open-ended questions produce better results than specific "risky" questions. Examples of open-ended questions include: tell me, what, where, when, how. Examples of risky questions to avoid, if possible, include: why, did, was, can you tell, or.

6. Follow-up

Follow up with questions such as "tell me more" and "what happened next." Avoid yes/no and forced choice questions unless necessary.

7. Ask One Question at a Time

Wait until the child is finished responding before asking the next question or commenting on what the child has said. Avoid repeating the question, as this may make the child feel that her/his first answer was wrong.

8. Understand Admissibility

Evaluators should be familiar with the Federal Rule of Evidence 401 and similar rules of evidence in their state, as well as, case law, including but not limited to Frye, Daubert, and Kumho. Forensic practice is specialized and requires specialized training and knowledge.

9. Remember These Are Children

Speak to a child in words s/he will understand. Avoid abstract, vague and legal terms. Some children may be more open and communicative if they are allowed to play or draw as they are interviewed.

10. Respect the Children

Listen and make sure that you understand the child's point of view apart from the view of the parents. Let them know that their views are important but they are not responsible for the outcome—their parents or the judge are.
