New Research: Web-Based Program Helps Children Cope Following Divorce

By Jesse Boring, PhD, and Irwin Sandler, PhD of Family Transitions—Programs that Work

New research has found that the internet-based program: Children of Divorce—Coping with Divorce (CoD-CoD), has demonstrated positive effects to promote coping efficacy and reduce mental health problems of children from divorced families. Dr. Jesse Boring, the program developer, presented the findings at the AFCC 49th Annual Conference in Chicago. The research included 147 children ages 11–16, randomly assigned to receive either CoD-CoD or another popular internet program for children of divorce. Participants were evaluated prior to participating in the programs and following program participation using validated self-report and parent-report measures.

Co-Parenting Communication Guide Now Available

Beginning in 2011, the AzAFCC Board of Directors sponsored a summit project to further the Board's mission of providing an interdisciplinary forum for the exchange of ideas and the development of procedures to assist families in conflict. The 2011 summit project, entitled Parenting Communication Resources in High-Conflict Cases, was created to assist judges in writing orders for parents. This year, the Board adopted a version of that summit project for litigants, The Co-parenting Communications Guide, intended for free distribution to litigating parents. The Guide is available on the Resources for Families page of the AFCC website.

AFCC Training Programs in Chicago

AFCC, in collaboration with Loyola University Chicago School of Law’s Civitas ChildLaw Center, is holding two new training programs on parenting coordination. Join Joan B. Kelly, March 4-5, for a two-day core training and Debra Carter, March 6-7, for an advanced training. Both training programs will be held at Loyola University Chicago in the Philip H. Corboy Law Center. Each training is eligible for 12 hours continuing education for psychologists and 12 CE clock hours for national certified counselors through NBCC. Approval for 12 CE credits for social workers in Illinois is pending, as is approval by the Illinois MCLE Board for 12 CLE credits.

AFCC 50th Anniversary—Movies of 1963
Our nostalgic, fun piece about 1963, the year AFCC was founded, continues this month. It seems fitting to take a look at the best films of 1963, as AFCC was founded in and is returning to Los Angeles, the home of American cinema. The 36th Academy Awards honored achievements in films from 1963. The ceremony, hosted by Jack Lemmon, was held April 13, 1964, at the Santa Monica Civic Auditorium.

Happy New Year to all of you. As I reflect on this year of incredible highs and lows, I want to take a moment to thank each of you for the contributions you make each day to improve the lives of the children, families and colleagues with whom you work.

To our Judges: Thank you for taking the time to truly care about the families who come before you and to struggling with the decisions you make promoting their individual and collective dignity.

To our Court-Connected Professionals: Thank you for your ongoing commitment to helping individuals and families achieve stability and structure in their lives despite the added challenge of diminishing funds and resources.

To our Mediators: Thank you for understanding the importance of helping families reach self-determined resolutions to their problems and assisting them in using collaborative processes to achieve their goals, thus allowing them to maintain control of their lives and to realize their own strength.

To our Custody Evaluators: Thank you for applying your knowledge and expertise in assessment and investigation to analyze the needs of families and children, and for providing the valuable information needed to assist decision-makers in making determinations about their futures.

To our Parenting Coordinators: Thank you for wading through the turbulent waters of chronic high-conflict parents and applying an array of problem-solving and decision-making skills so children may be shielded from familial tension and hostility, affording them some sense of stability and normalcy in their lives.

To our Attorneys: Thank you for caring about the individuals with whom you work—with all of their fears, anger, needs and wants—and for advocating for them during a tumultuous time in their lives, in an environment foreign to them, within which they are often lost without you.

To our Researchers: Thank you for working so hard to answer difficult questions, provide valuable information and challenge unsupported beliefs so that practitioners can feel more confident about their interventions with families.

To our Trainers and Teachers: Thank you for using your expertise to ensure that we are well prepared with the highest quality up-to-date information and processes so that we may be confident in our ability to meet the needs of others.

To our FCR Editorial Staff: Thank you for ensuring that the Family Court Review remains the premiere journal for everyone who works with children and families experiencing the stresses of family reorganization.
To our Policy Advocates: Thank you on behalf of the wide variety of people: fathers, mothers, children, victims of abuse, unrepresented litigants and so many more, for ensuring that their needs are considered and included in the programs, laws and policies that affect us all.

To our Therapists: Thank you for helping individuals and families learn to cope with, adjust to, manage and overcome the many stressors and challenges they face.

To the AFCC Board: Thank you for giving your time and expertise so that the organization continues to fulfill its mission, stay true to its values, and remain relevant and vibrant.

To the AFCC Staff: Thank you for being such a high-quality, readily-available, pleasant, efficient, organized, thoughtful and creative team that ensures our organization and its members will always be number one.

To anyone and everyone I missed: Thank you for taking on your role with the families we serve and represent. Your work gives them the most positive experience possible during one of the most difficult times in their lives.

Thank you all for your contributions over the last year and for your continued commitment in 2013.

Wishing you all the best,

Arnie
New Research: Web-Based Program Helps Children Cope Following Divorce
By Jesse Boring, PhD, and Irwin Sandler, PhD of Family Transitions—Programs that Work

New research has found that the internet-based program: Children of Divorce–Coping with Divorce (CoD-CoD), has demonstrated positive effects to promote coping efficacy and reduce mental health problems of children from divorced families. Dr. Jesse Boring, the program developer, presented the findings at the AFCC 49th Annual Conference in Chicago. The research included 147 children ages 11–16, randomly assigned to receive either CoD-CoD or another popular internet program for children of divorce. Participants were evaluated prior to participating in the programs and following program participation using validated self-report and parent-report measures. Results showed that youth who participated in CoD-CoD improved more than those using two other popular internet-based websites for children of divorce on measures of child mental health problems and coping efficacy. Children with higher levels of problems and lower coping efficacy showed the most improvement. This is the first experimental evidence of the efficacy of an internet-based program for children of divorce.

An Online Program for Children of Divorce Ages 11 and Up

What is CoD-CoD?
The Children of Divorce–Coping with Divorce (CoD-CoD) is a five-module internet-based mental health promotion program for children of divorce ages 11 and up. Through the careful adaptation of intervention components previously demonstrated to be effective for children from disrupted families, CoD-CoD is designed to promote participant’s development of four divorce-specific protective factors that have been identified through previous generative research: increased active coping, decreased avoidant coping, improved coping efficacy, and healthier divorce-related appraisals (see figure 1).

In order to develop these protective factors, participants master a variety of coping skills and then practice integrating these skills to solve a diverse set of problems. In order to engage participants, CoD-CoD utilizes a mix of modalities including videos, animations, interactive activities, quizzes, and video games. Users work toward a program goal, which they set for themselves and complete home practice tasks that challenge them to use in their day-to-day lives. This process culminates in the final module when the users harness their program skills to develop a plan that addresses the divorce related events they reported being most concerned about in the first module. A preview of the module format and sample activities is available here. See Figure 2 for an outline of the skills and information taught in the CoD-CoD program.

Overall What Did You Think of CoD-CoD?

- Pretty Bad: 0.0%
- OK: 18.4%
- Good: 26.7%
- Great: 54.9%
Here are some of the things children and adolescents say they like about the program:

- Private-They can get help with their thoughts, feeling, and problems without fear of embarrassment.
- Helpful-They set their own program goal and almost all children make progress toward that goal.
- Personalized-The program help the child address the topics and concerns that interest them most.
- Engaging-Parents sometimes assume their children are playing videogames because they stay so focused while going through CoD-CoD.
- Funny-It's not uncommon for kids to laugh out loud during the program.

How has CoD-CoD Been Evaluated?

Children of Divorce - Coping with Divorce (CoD-CoD) was evaluated in a randomized experimental trial conducted at the Arizona State University Prevention Research Center. CoD-CoD is the only internet-based program for children of divorce to be evaluated in such a trial. The trial found that:

- CoD-CoD improves coping efficacy (the child’s belief that they can cope with stressors).
- CoD-CoD reduces mental health problems (as reported by children and parents).
- Program effects are stronger for children with higher risk and more initial problems.

Figure 4 shows an illustration of CoD-CoD’s effect on mental health problems as compared to the control condition (self-study). A full presentation of the findings was presented at the AFCC 49th Annual Conference. A manuscript of these results is under development and will be submitted to an academic journal in February 2013.

How Can Families Access CoD-CoD?

CoD-CoD is offered through Family Transitions, which was founded by AFCC members: Irwin Sandler, PhD, Sharlene Wolchik, PhD, and Michele Porter, PhD. Drs. Sandler and Wolchik have spent more than 30 years developing and evaluating programs for children and families experiencing changes like divorce. Family Transitions is committed to providing programs that meet the highest scientific standards for improving children’s mental health and offering programs to families going through divorce, separation or bereavement due to the death of a parent.

More information on CoD-CoD for professionals and families is available here.
