AFCC Board Announces Price Freeze

The AFCC Board of Directors has voted to freeze all prices for members until at least January 2010. The unanimous decision was reached at the Board’s September 25, 2008 meeting in Albuquerque, New Mexico, the same week the United States Congress struggled with the proposed bailout of Wall Street and its effect on the global economy.

“Everywhere we look, prices are increasing,” said AFCC President Dr. Robin Deutsch. “Gas is up, groceries cost more, inflation is higher and so is the cost of doing business for AFCC. But we have experienced significant growth in the last few years, which has strengthened our financial health. The price freeze is AFCC’s way of telling members that we appreciate their loyalty during these difficult times.”

President’s Message

AFCC is many things. It is a source of information, innovation and ideas. It is a mission-driven association that looks to improve our systems and services for children and families. And it is a place where many members find camaraderie and collegiality.

At the same time, AFCC is also a small business and must be operated accordingly so that we may provide our programs, products and services. In recent years, operating costs have increased significantly. Everything is increasing, from rent to staff salaries, to the cost of maintaining and improving our technology. Conference expenses continue to rise and coffee costs more than $100 per gallon at some venues (and that is far less than one week’s quota for some of us as individuals). I cannot begin to describe what it takes for us to provide a decent health plan for our staff. But as an organization dedicated to family well-being, the AFCC Board has always felt it is necessary to walk the talk and provide its staff with a good health insurance plan.

With the cost of business increasing, with prices rising everywhere, and with our increasingly uncertain economy, AFCC must protect itself and its members with appropriate action. Therefore we are announcing a freeze on all member prices until 2010. It seems a bit backwards, I know. How will AFCC keep up if we cannot raise prices to at least keep up with inflation? Especially when we have been adding more and more member benefits?

Simply put, we are betting on you. We think that AFCC members will stick with us through the tough economic times, just as we’ve kept costs down and expanded benefits in recent years for you. We’ve been doing this because AFCC has grown. There are many new members and more of you are coming to conferences and training programs. This has improved our financial health. It’s like the line from the old commercial: “How do we do it? Volume!”

This may not be the most effective small business strategy as we lose a bit of financial ground every year. But we have held the line over the years because we believe it is important to have more and more members dedicated to the AFCC mission and contributing to this association. We believe that we can make a difference to the families we serve.

So we will freeze all of our prices for members until 2010 — conferences, trainings, dues, publications, everything. It is our way of saying thank you for being supportive. And it is our way of encouraging you to stick with us.

These are difficult economic times and we want to send a strong message that we will support our members. And we hope you will support your association. We know that $150 for dues is not a small amount of money for many members; for others it may not represent as much. (If you have the resources, please think about contributing to our scholarship fund so that those with financial need can more easily participate in AFCC conferences).

When your renewal notice comes this year or next, or when you decide where you will get your continuing education, please think for just a moment of the value of AFCC to you: The Family Court Review, listervs, conferences, the AFCC eNEWS, an AFCC Chapter or even listening to conference plenary sessions through the member section of the AFCC Web site. For me, it is especially the network of professionals with whom I consult, learn and collaborate.

I have been very fortunate to have found a professional home with AFCC. Last summer, along with my colleagues Matt Sullivan and Peggie Ward, I was able to participate in a remarkably innovative intervention for high conflict families (see related story on page 8). That isn’t the reason I joined AFCC, but it would never have happened without it. Perhaps it isn’t the quantifiable benefits but the intangibles that make this organization special. Whatever it is, stick with us, the best is yet to come.

AFCC Price Freeze

Dr. Deutsch noted that the freeze will extend to registration fees for conferences, training programs and pre-conference institutes as well as publication prices and membership dues. “We actually have not raised dues since 2001,” she said, “but given the cost of doing business, we have been seriously considering a small increase. Discussions of any increase are now on hold until 2010.” According to Dr. Deutsch, the freeze will not apply to non-member prices but the association will make every reasonable effort to hold the line there as well.
MEMBER PROFILE

AFCC Member, Ernest A. Sanchez, LCSW

Ernie Sanchez is an AFCC member from San Fernando, California. He serves as a Senior Family Mediator within Family Court Services at the Los Angeles County Superior Court. He joined the court in 1985 and has mediated over 8,500 child custody disputes. Ernie has presented at AFCC conferences since 1989 and has served as head shepherd at conferences. In September 2006, he appeared as a guest speaker on a one-hour PBS special entitled, “Kids and Divorce: For Better or Worse.”

How did you become interested in the field of separation and divorce?

I was first introduced to AFCC in 1979 when I was a first year graduate student at the University of Southern California, School of Social Work. As if by destiny, I had been placed by the University at the Los Angeles Superior Court, Conciliation Court for field work experience. Child custody mediation was still in its infancy. The Bar Associations were still warming to the idea of dispute resolution and here I was, knowing nothing of the mediation process or of the courts, and feeling very intimidated by the responsibilities that the work required. I stepped up to the task and quickly learned that between 1970 and 1980, Meyer Elkin, Hugh McIsaac, Jeannie Ames, Stan Cohen, Justice Donald King and many other outstanding professionals had worked hard to establish mediation in the courts and around the world through legislation and AFCC. That first year placement resulted in my admiration for the work, the professionalism and integrity that was brought to the workplace. I was determined to return to the Conciliation Court and work to contribute to the field. I applied and was hired in 1985.

What is the best advice that you have been given?

Always remember to keep your identity in check and never forget that you are a professional with integrity in the direct services you provide. Who gave me this advice? My parents.

What advice would you give to someone entering the field?

Work hard at remaining neutral and impartial and respecting every person’s right to privacy and self-determination. This is essential. Let go of your own view of right and wrong, of your own view of the world and approach everything you see and do from a place of inquiry. Basically, you teach me about your world.

What are the greatest challenges you foresee in the field of court-connected child custody mediation ten years from now?

The erosion of the mediation process. Mediation was designed to provide individuals with the opportunity to resolve their disputes on their own, with the assistance of a neutral, impartial facilitator. Today’s focus is in finding “the truth.” Evaluation has become the focus to assist the judiciary in ruling on matters of the family. Mediation was designed to create orders that cover the areas of concern for each party, not determining whether or not the concern was valid or true. Truth is for the courts to decide on a factual basis. Mediation was designed for dispute resolution to avoid litigation. The mediator, except in suspicions of child abuse, suicidal ideation or homicidal ideation, provides solution focused options for parental consideration in the processes of dispute resolution. Allegations abound in mediating disputes, but the task is to help parents and the family system redirect their energies from attacking each other to beginning anew, creating a new contract with orders that covers each parent’s areas of concern and the needs and safety of their children.

What areas of your work do you enjoy most?

The families I meet every day. Knowing that I can create a difference toward the positive resolution of conflicts that will make a child’s life better during a parental separation is a major league reward. I leave work a happy person knowing that I have helped a couple and their family avoid the turmoil and expense of litigation.

Hon. Peter Boslier
Principal Family Court Judge of New Zealand

Custody cases in our Courts are very different than cases in other Courts. Lawyers are generally trained to represent clients and to advocate on their behalf within a system that is complex and often idiosyncratic. However, the lines are not so difficult to see in most Court cases. Whether criminal or civil, there are two parties in opposing stances. The points of view of each are put, evidence called, questioning occurs and the Judge delivers a verdict according to the arguments that appear to have the most merit.

Children’s custody cases are not about the opposing sides but, of course, about children and their welfare. So how can children’s positions best be put and a decision be made having regard to what children need and not simply what their parents want?

I pen these remarks unapologetically from a judicial perspective. Psychological medicine is a world into which I intentionally do not venture for the purpose of this article. Instead, I would like to discuss and provoke some thought about how custody cases should be handled and how we best go about achieving our objectives.

If there is one observation that I hope meets with universal approval it is that resolution of issues for children does not benefit from delay. Cases take on a life of their own and status quo situations are often difficult to dislodge, even if this is grossly unfair to the children or one of the parties.

It is inevitable that contested custody cases will be initiated by one of the parents filing an application for an order. For completely acceptable and understandable reasons, the orders that the court is asked to make in respect of the child’s welfare are as perceived by the parent concerned. It is not unusual to have an affidavit accompanying an application, which purports to describe what the care arrangements should be—because the child concerned is said to have reported that to the initiating parent.

Equally unsurprising is the likely response of the other parent, who may be feeling disempowered, cut off, disrespected and often highly offended by supporting material filed by the initiating parent.

I think that unless early intervention occurs, the perceived needs of a child become the issues as framed by the parents and, as bitterness settles in, the children’s needs and welfare interests become submerged in the parents’ perceptions. My experience has been that, unless there is judicial intervention at an early stage, it becomes increasingly difficult to shift parental attitudes.

With all of this in mind, I favor early judicial intervention in cases in order to decide whether a case lends itself to conciliation or mediation, or whether the situation is so fraught with conflict and one of the parents disempowered, that firm judicial direction is needed at an early stage.

It is inconceivable to me that, at this stage in a case, the children’s needs can be accurately accessed unless there is representation of the children and appropriate input of their views. How is the Judge to possibly calculate this otherwise? I suppose it could be argued that Judges are worldly-wise and always know what is in the best interests of children. It could also be said that parents are best placed to represent what their children want. But I am skeptical of both arguments. Children will so often tell their parents what their parents want to hear. Judges, also, may be excessively influenced by their own upbringing and views of parenting practice.

I accordingly favor immediate appointment of an Advocate for a child, whether that be an attorney or another suitably qualified person such as a social worker. It need not necessarily be a psychologist. I think it essential that such a person sees the child away from influence and is able to put fairly and firmly to the Court, without fear of criticism from the parents, what the child wants.

There is, of course, a category of custody cases where discerning what a child really wants, because of what the child represents, is much more difficult. I talk of cases where children have been alienated or coached. The courts must be constantly alive to the criticism of a parent that this may have occurred and that what the child is representing is not really the child’s properly held view.

I favor early identification of cases where this may be an issue and a specialist report being obtained. For if there is truly alienation occurring, judicial intervention and orders may be unproductive and the case may become intractable. Therapy may be essential at this early stage.

In addition to representation of a child’s needs and welfare from an Advocate and/or specialist report, there is the added option of the Judge electing to see the child personally. There is much debate on whether this is a good idea or a bad idea. In New Zealand, we have elected to obtain children’s wishes directly and cautiously if the child wishes to convey those to the Judge. Protective and natural justice mechanisms must be put into place if this is to occur. But I do want to say that my experience of this process so far has been as the recipient of valuable information as to the child’s needs. This has not necessarily been evident from Advocates or reports. It has provided an additional and enlightening dimension to judicial decision making.

The purpose of the model that I propose is to frame the issues correctly for the child at the outset, and not seek to do so much later on and especially just before trial. By then, the issues might be affected by quite different and unfair considerations. I have already mentioned status quo arguments.

I would readily accept that when a case comes on for trial, conventional judicial practice must prevail. And by

by Robin Deutsch, Ph.D., Boston, Massachusetts, Matthew Sullivan, Ph.D., Palo Alto, California and Peggie Ward, Ph.D., Natick, Massachusetts

After struggling for years with some of the most difficult and heartbreaking post-divorce family situations—where a child has rejected one of their parents—three AFCC members designed, funded and conducted an innovative and intensive clinical approach to work with families called Breaking Barriers Camp.

Five families participated in three and a half days of psycho-educational groups, strategic interventions and enjoyable family camp activities this summer at Common Ground Center in Starksboro, Vermont. The families came from Arizona, Florida, Massachusetts, Minnesota and Toronto. In four of the five families, one parent (either mother or father) had had no contact with a child for at least six months and some up to two years. The families (including both the parents and all the children) were instructed to live at the camp.

Most parents had been involved in litigation for years and only spoke with each other in the courthouse. After this intensive program these initial results were noted:

• Every child had multiple connections, including direct interactions with the estranged parent;

• The majority of participants rated their experience a five on a five point scale, with the rest rating it a four;

• Both parents in each family, many of whom had not spoken outside of the courtroom, met together successfully at least once; and

• Four of the five families left with a mutually agreed upon after-care plan to build on the parent-child connections and co-parenting progress that had been made.

Breaking Barriers Camp began with a brainstorming group in Massachusetts, and—true to the tradition of AFCC interdisciplinary innovation—included judges, attorneys and mental health professionals. AFCC President Robin Deutsch and Peggie Ward quickly recruited Matt Sullivan to join the clinical team. The group knew they would only have a successful program if:

• All members of a family system participated in the program;

• The program was off-site with overnight accommodations for each group;

• The program included intensive group work for parents and children;

• The program offered many recreational opportunities for children and parents to participate in; and

• The program offered a tremendous amount of support for every small step taken toward reunification between rejected parent and children.

The Common Ground Center complemented the clinical aspects of the program with a beautiful site, rustic cabins that slept up to six people for parents (divided by gender), cabins for children and a skilled, dedicated and charismatic staff who did projects and activities during the day, and slept in the cabins with each group at night.

Camp days began with yoga at 6:00am and continued with campfires and song until 9:00pm. Groups were assigned to each clinical team member by the following: Matt led the West Group (parents who had little to no relationship with their children); Peggie led the East Group (parents who played various roles in keeping the children aligned to them and away from the other parent) and Robin ran the Common Ground Group (for all the children and adolescents). Groups ran for three hours in the morning followed by afternoons with structured, strategically planned camp activities.

The clinical team took every opportunity available during the day to intervene with constellations of family members to create bridges for children and parents (or parents and parents) to connect with one another. The families, after their work in the morning groups, were remarkably open to all interventions and actively engaged with staff to support the goals of the camp. Communication and coordination was key and camp director Carole Blane was the communication link between camp staff and clinicians. Peggie, Robin and Matt met each morning to incorporate any needed changes to the group program and at lunch to plan the afternoon interventions. Dinner provided yet another opportunity for clinicians to regroup and plan evening interventions. The camp in July ran from Wednesday evening until Saturday at 1:00pm, followed by exit interviews for all. No one left without a clear roadmap for follow-up work with professionals in their home towns. By Saturday afternoon, Peggie, Robin and Matt, as well as the entire camp staff, were both elated and exhausted as the families made their emotional departures. Staff debriefing was essential and planning for next year ended midday Sunday.

The clinicians were encouraged by the positive impact that many of the conceptual innovations of the camp program provided to these extremely difficult family relationship issues. The program brought highly conflicted co-parents and their children together to work on identified issues and placed them in working groups run by skilled leaders. The camp provided a rich array of activities and opportunities for connection and communication between family members, and clinical interventions were delivered wherever and whenever opportunity presented. Peggie, Robin and Matt helped build bridges to more positive rela-

Breaking Barriers

It wasn’t easy, but initial feedback suggests it was successful. The clinical team plans to follow-up with the families at the six-month point and to build on this pilot program next summer for five-and-a-half days (every family wanted it to be longer). Robin, Matt and Peggie, as well as the Common Ground Staff will all return. There are areas that need improvement, but we have the successful scaffolding on which to build. One challenge that emerged was the difficulty in obtaining commitments from those families who did not have a court order to attend. After interviewing 25 families, four of the five families who attended did so with a court order. While not all family members referred were accepted, conversations with AFCC custody evaluators and parenting coordinators helped our decision-making process.

Many of these families would not have had the opportunity to attend had it not been for the terrific support of AFCC members. They not only provided informed and thoughtful referrals, but they also provided private donations that allowed this program to proceed.

AFCC will host an advanced 3-hour workshop on this topic at its 46th Annual Conference, Children, Courts and Custody: Back to the Future or Full Steam Ahead? May 27-30, 2009 in New Orleans.

ACR Awards AFCC Executive Director

that I mean that the parents must be allowed to give their points of view and be questioned and any expert evidence must be put and tested. But again, I think it quite justifiable that the issues for the children should be constantly reframed and reinforced and that issues relevant only to the parents, and plainly not very relevant to the children, should be filtered out. The role of attorney or lawyer in this respect, at a hearing, is to my mind invaluable. So often the truth is not as it appears to be and an objective advocacy on behalf of a child brings a sense of reality.

And so it is that I return to my opening observation. Custody cases have an element simply not shared by other court work. Children are effectively a party and yet, unless we are careful, a case concerning children can proceed without their issues being properly framed and without their needs and wants being firmly and clearly put. I favor a judicial system that is alive to this need, to ensure that custody cases proceed on issues and evidence that deal primarily with the children’s welfare and not simply the wishes of parents.

Peter Boshier will present a plenary session on this topic at AFCC’s 46th Annual Conference, Children, Courts and Custody: Back to the Future or Full Steam Ahead? May 27-30, 2009 in New Orleans.
AFCC Chapter News

Arizona

The AFCC Arizona Chapter will present its Annual Conference, January 30-February 1, 2009 in Sedona. The conference theme is Listening: Can You Hear Me Now? to reflect the importance of true and effective communication in family court situations. The Friday night plenary features a Night at the Movies format, with movie and television clips showing the disastrous consequences of not listening. Saturday morning’s plenary session brings the AFCC and NCJFCJ Wingspread Conference to Arizona, with speakers Billie Lee Dunford-Jackson, Peter Salem, Nancy Ver Steegh and Hon. Karen Adam—all of whom participated in Wingspread.

Workshops include topics on ethics, the fundamental right to parent, vicarious trauma, non-verbal communication and cues, Arizona’s model parenting plans (which are being updated to reflect current research), cooperative vs. parallel parenting, international custody issues, visitation-resistant children and the critique of custody evaluations.

California

The AFCC California Chapter is currently preparing for its Annual Conference, February 6-8, 2009 in San Francisco, California at the Mark Hopkins Hotel. The Chapter has secured a special room rate of $205. Registration and program information on the two-and-a-half day program will be available at www.afcc-ca.org after November 1, 2008. The California Chapter is embarking on a new initiative, which includes drafting a Resolution to redefine the issue of adequate resources for children in the family court for what it is—a public health issue—not simply a court resources issue. The Chapter is hopeful that other groups of legal and mental health professionals will partner with them in their efforts on this issue. The Chapter believes that if all organizations get behind this effort, they can ultimately have a positive impact on legislation and distribution of judicial resources for the children involved in their courts.

Colorado

The AFCC Colorado Chapter held its fourth and last critical discussion in the 2008 series on the Perspectives of Family Court Assessments and Alternative Models—an exploration of evaluation, representation and intervention in contested divorce cases. The program took place on September 12, 2008 at the University of Denver, Sturm College of Law. This discussion brought together the largest number of attendees, as well as participants from across the state.

The Chapter’s half-day conference included a panel of local judicial representatives who spoke on the Judicial Response to Assessment, Representation and Intervention Issues. The panel members included Hon. Randy Arp, Hon. Jann DuBois, Magistrate Elizabeth Leith and Magistrate Dinsmore Tuttle. Judge Arp, Magistrate Leith and Magistrate Tuttle are on the Colorado Chapter Board of Directors.

Florida

The AFCC Florida Chapter’s 7th Annual Conference, Thinking Outside the Box: Innovative Approaches to Families in the Courts, is scheduled for February 27-28, 2009 at the Renaissance Tampa Hotel International Plaza. The Chapter is excited to continue its working relationship with the Office of State Court Administrators and the Family Law Section of the Florida Bar. The Florida Chapter Model Parenting Plan Committee is collaborating with the Florida Bar to develop model parenting plans in light of sweeping statutory changes effective October 1, 2008 that eliminate “custody” and provide for, more appropriately, “parenting plans.”

Massachusetts

The AFCC Massachusetts Chapter welcomes seven new members to its Board of Directors: Hon. Jay Blitzman, Anne Cremonini, Jennifer Durand, Alan Geismer, Jessica Griffin, Ilene Mitchell and Hon. Geoffrey Wilson. The Chapter’s Annual Dinner was held on September 18, 2008 and featured remarks by AFCC President Robin Deutsch. Most of the Chapter’s activities this coming year will be focused on the area of cultural competency in the family and juvenile courts. This will be the featured topic at Roundtables throughout the state and at the Chapter’s Annual Conference, April 3, 2009. The Chapter is pleased to announce its new Web site at www.maafcc.org.

AFCC Leadership Institute

AFCC held its first Leadership Institute for current and incoming Chapter leaders in Albuquerque, NM on September 25, 2008. Co-led by Maureen Robinson, author of Boards that Work, and Leslye Hunter, AFCC Chapter Services and Development Consultant, it was attended by representatives of all 11 AFCC Chapters including: Jack Moran, AZ; Sherrie Kibler-Sanchez and Thomas T. Lewis, CA; Michele Tipple, CO; Lee Schreiber, FL; Alexander Jones, MA; Michelle Henry and Art Nissenbaum, MO; Gary Debele, MN; Sharon Montgomery, NJ; Steve Abel and Rodney Wells, NY; Craig Perkins, ON; Louise Lee and David Eaker, TX. The opportunity for Chapter leaders to share ideas and learn new strategies for achieving Chapters’ growth and sustainability was invaluable and enjoyed by all.

Child Custody Evaluations Survey by the University of Illinois

The University of Illinois is conducting a survey to better understand the contextual circumstances that affect custody evaluators’ decision-making processes. The study results will also help improve training for custody evaluators. This project is being conducted by Dr. Jennifer Hardesty at the University of Illinois and Dr. Jason Hans at the University of Kentucky with funding from the University of Illinois Campus Research Board. To be eligible, you must have completed a professional custody evaluation for a United States court system in the last 10 years. The survey will take about 15-20 minutes to complete. If you have questions or would like to participate, contact Megan Haselschwerdt at mhasels2@uiuc.edu or (217) 333-6924.
AFCC presents two NEW books

Innovations in Family Law Practice

In this 171-page book, six chapters describe recent innovations in family law practice. Learn what makes for an ineffective family lawyer, how to run a family law self-help center and about the evolution of the Family Court Duty Counsel Program in Ontario. Examine how the family law field is changing through the use of collaborative practice, how to unbundle legal services, and how to use cooperative negotiation agreements. Edited by Kelly Browe Olson and Nancy Ver Steegh, this book presents an inspiring guide to new developments in practicing family law.

Innovations in Interventions with High Conflict Families

High conflict families continue to challenge professionals who work with separating and divorcing parents. Edited by Linda B. Fieldstone and Christine A. Coates, this 225-page volume of six chapters discusses topics such as the difference between high conflict, alienating behavior, and domestic abuse and how to reconnect children with absent parents. Explore a high conflict divorce education program and bringing co-parent counseling services to high-conflict low-income families. Also discussed are two recent additions to the field: mental health consultation in child custody cases and parenting coordination.

What do you like most about AFCC?
AFCC has been the leader in providing outstanding continuing education and training for court-connected and private mediators, evaluators, attorneys, judges and the general public. AFCC has been the innovator that provides conferences that do not shy away from controversy but instead present the pros and cons of any issue. It is truly cutting edge, present day, to-the-minute professionalism at its best.

What do you enjoy doing in your free time?
I enjoy camping, playing my guitar, watching a good movie and relaxing in our backyard.

What is your proudest personal achievement?
Publishing my ideas. I never thought they were so important until someone else gave me validation by publishing them for a greater audience.

Your wife (Sherrie Kibler-Sanchez) is President of the AFCC California Chapter—what has your role been like as First Husband?
My role as First Husband has always been to be as supportive as I can be. I am very proud of my wife. She truly embodies the essence, goals and aspirations of AFCC. She deserves a lot of credit for the programs that have been established in the Los Angeles Superior Court. She was the initial brainchild/creator of the Pre-Contempt, Contemnors Group that has been refined to the current, six week Parenting Without Conflict counseling program for high conflict parents. She was also the initial brainchild/creator for the Parents and Children Together program currently being used as an orientation program prior to child custody mediation. She is the innovator. She’s an amazing woman. She has the conviction to continue the work that Meyer Elkin, Jeannie Ames and other renowned predecessors began. I just watch in awe!
